Emergency Response, Safety and Medication Systems

In an emergency, time is very important! This list includes information about Emergency Response Systems, monitoring systems and personal identification options in case a loved one becomes lost.

Personal Emergency Response systems (PERS) let you to call for help at the touch of a button. They can provide a feeling of security for those with problems such as falling, dizziness, serious health conditions, difficulty getting around and can help people stay safely in their homes longer.

When you press the button this opens two-way, communication with a call center. The responder can talk to you, see what help is needed and call for help immediately or if the caller is unresponsive or going in and out of consciousness, then agent will call 911. Most companies will have your health information on file, along with whom you want called if you need help.

There are 3 ways these systems work:
- Making use of a LAN line,(regular phone line) only for use within your home or yard depending on the range
- Making use of a cellular option in your home or yard depending on the range
- Making use of a cellular option but is mobile and can be used even when you’re not at home, and is available to you wherever you are.

With so much to consider, we hope the attached Decision Guide will help you narrow your search for the right system to meet your needs.
